TO RIDE LIKE THE MEN.

THAT IS THE AMBITION OF THE DRESS REFORMERS OF TODAY.

Miss Mabel Jenness to Break the Ice of Custom by Galloping Through Central Park Astride a Spirited Steed-Bistory of the Side Saddle.

Five hundred years ago the ladies of the court of merry England, when they sought the greenwood to hunt the deer, or the grassy plain to fly their hawks, rode right gayly to the sport in what a

The dress reformers will have none of the horse equipage which has served alike Di Vernon, Lady Gay Spanker, the equestriennes of the Meadowbrook bunt, the maiden ambling down the park bridle path, or the bright girl dashing along the country road or They have achieved the divided skirt, and they declare that if it is good enough for house or street wear it will do excellently well for a riding habit, and that the cross-saddle used by man belongs no more to him than to his sisters, his cousins and his aunts.

Miss Mabel Jenness, of New York city, is the leader of this new movement to emancipate her sex from the traditions and the trammels of centuries. Her modiste is now engaged on a costume to meet the demands of the emergency. When it is done Miss Jenness announces that she will put it on, bestride her horse and take a gallop through Central park.
